No Salad for Alexander Skaarsgard For the “True Blood” actor, it’s manly meals all the way

To celebrate their upcoming film The East, Alexander Skarsgard, Ellen Page, Patricia Clarkson, were spotted having a celebratory dinner at Stanton Social on Monday in New York City.

The group of about 15 decided to splurge and enjoy a lavish dinner with the restaurant's signature dishes. They sat down to a surplus of red snapper tacos, potato and goat cheese pierogies, smoked duck and baby kale salad, wok charred edamame, beef Carpaccio, spicy lamb souvlaki, vegan spaghetti squash, shrimp and grits, grilled asparagus and herb dusted frites. That sounds like some spread, right?

It’s no news that celebrities are anal about their appearance and always aim to stay in shape. When it came to ordering, most of the group decided to go with a gluten-free or vegan entrée options, but Skarsgaard opted to go for a classic manly meal of meat and beer. Skarsgaard was "all about the meat and beer," an onlooker tells People. "He lightly flirted with his waitress. Pointing at his Brooklyn Lager, he asked, 'Miss, could you bring me another fine brew just like this one?'"

Skarsgard plays a vampire on the show True Blood, so I guess you can say he likes to eat meat. Well just like his character Eric Northman he shows his hunger for meat and women.
